Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Remnant showers from the cold front that passed through yesterday will taper off this morning as high pressure builds in over northwest California. With high pressure building look for clearing skies today accompanied by warming temperatures. A more potent front will arrive early Monday bringing gusty southerly winds and rain.

San Francisco Weather:

A weak system will dissipate over the California coast today. A few lingering showers are possible Saturday morning along the coast and in the North Bay. Dry weather will then return to all areas by Saturday afternoon. This will persist through Monday when another Pacific system pushes onshore. This will again be primarily from the San Francisco Bay to the north. After this system clears by Tuesday, a strong ridge of high pressure will begin to build across the southwestern states and is expected to bring dry and warm conditions through next week.

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

High pressure will provide dry weather and seasonable temperatures for the rest of the weekend. Weak weather systems will provide precipitation chances Monday and Tuesday.

Hanford Weather:

Dry conditions and above normal temperatures are expected for the weekend. A cooling trend will occur early next week with breezy to gusty conditions likely Monday and Tuesday. High pressure will return for the remainder of the week with temperatures warming to above normal again.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

A weak upper trough will move through today and again on Monday bringing near or slightly below normal temperatures through Tuesday. High pressure is expected to kick off a warming trend with above normal temperatures and weak offshore flow by the middle of next week.

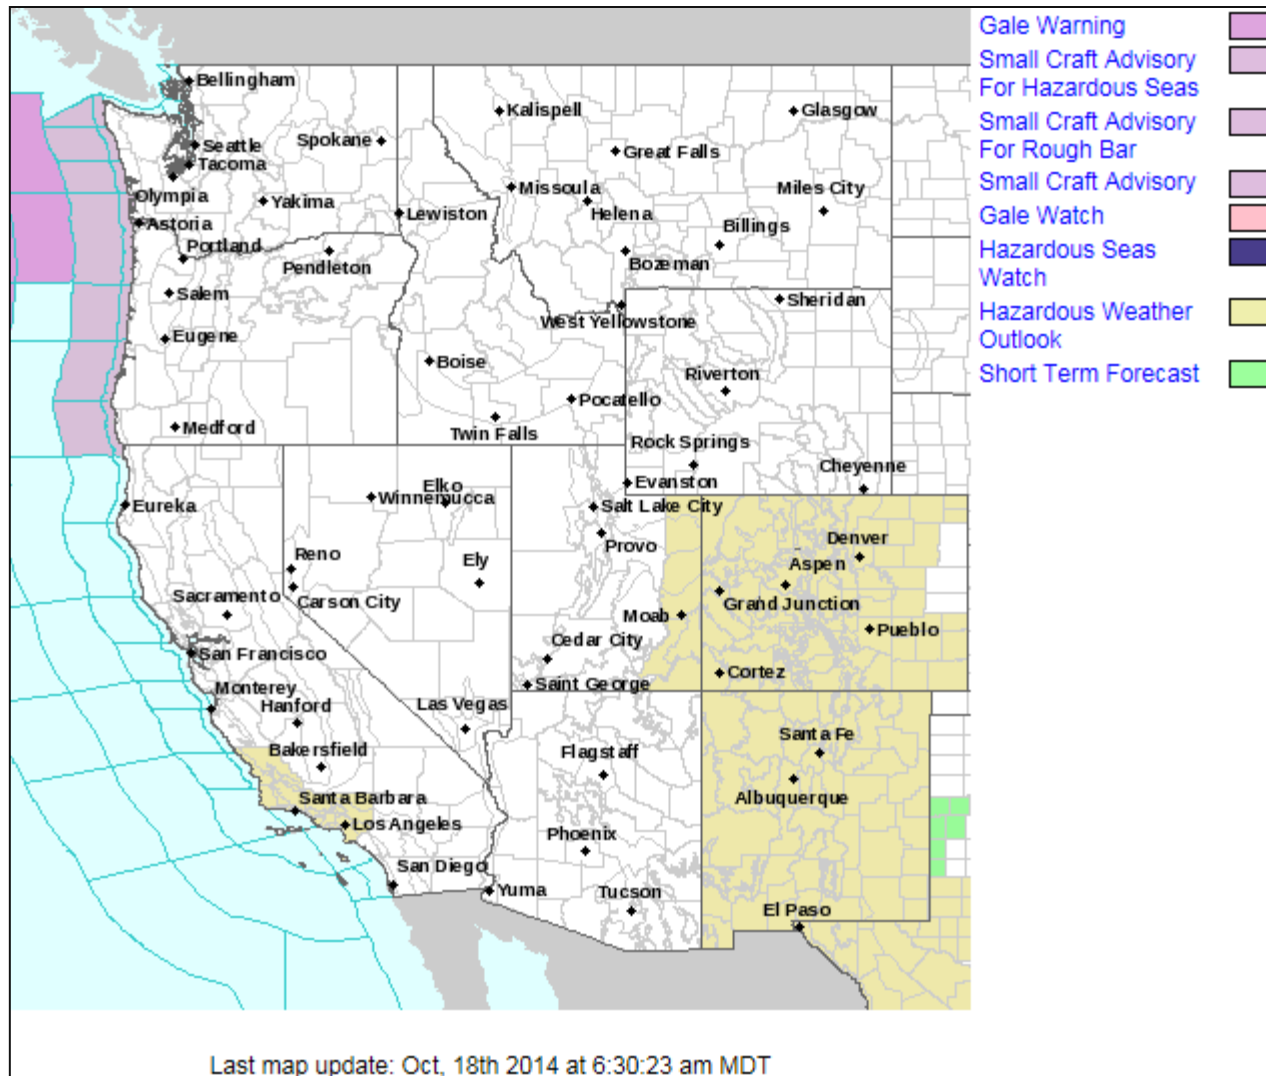

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

A deep marine layer will remain in place through Tuesday as several weak troughs move inland over the West Coast. Daytime temperatures will be a little below average then becoming warmer mid to late next week as high pressure builds.

Southeast California Weather:

A series of weather disturbances through early next week, however a relatively dry air mass will limit any precipitation chances. Otherwise variable cloudiness can be expected with slightly warmer than normal afternoon temperatures. A strong high pressure system is forecast to rebuild by the end of next week.
